DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

A rare surviving example of the small "Gothic" house within the city, this house has three gables, two verandas, and a bay window, features that "made possible the fuller enjoyment of the circumambient scene."⁽¹⁾ Although its original property once was at least twice as large as the present lot, the house still stands detached in its garden. Noteworthy features of this cottage are the picket fence along the sidewalks, the brick walks that hug the house, and the fantasy of the three sets of terracotta chimney pots. Inside and out, the house is little changed, because modernizing has been done superficially. The house gives the feeling of being a simple country house. Inside are four square rooms on the first two floors, two on each side of a broad center hall in which the stair curves up to the third floor where there are two rooms. A back wing includes kitchen and powder room on the first floor and two baths on the second floor. The woodwork in the two parlors is late Greek Revival in style; the windows are made to look as though they were casements, but in fact are not.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

This cottage ornée is significant as probably the oldest residence in the district, having been built before 1851. ⁽¹⁾ Its front porches once faced the open slope southward towards George Grundy's country seat, "Bolton," and the city beyond. Across Bolton Street in another detached house lived the Reverend Henry Van Dyke Johns (in whose memory Memorial Church was named). Tradition has it that 232 W. Lanvale Street was built by the Reverend Mr. Johns for his daughter. The first owners were Mr. and Mrs. John Robins, of Burlington, N.J., who purchased property from John Gibson in 1850 and sold it to Mrs. William W. Taylor in 1863. The house came into the possession of the Dobbin family through the will of Mrs. Elizabeth B. Wethered, who bought it in 1878, and, it remained in their hands until purchased by Mrs. Nancy Howard Venable in 1949.

Occupants include distinguished academicians. Most recent was William Force Stead, who taught at Catholic University, and whose poems appear in the Oxford Anthology of Modern Verse. For more than thirty years the dean of the University of Maryland Law School, Roger Howell, lived there with his family, including Janet Howell Clark who was Headmistress of Bryn Mawr School, 1933-1935, and then a dean at the University of Rochester.

The few other structures shown on Poppleton's 1851 map have either disappeared or been altered in appearance or use.
